

International Institute for Sustainable Laboratories

Join I2SL in Making the World's High-Tech Laboratories Sustainable

The International Institute for Sustainable Laboratories (I2SL) is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization dedicated to the sustainable design, engineering, and operation of laboratories. I2SL is the world's premier resource for sustainable laboratory professionals—from lab owners, operators, and facility managers to lab designers, engineers, and builders—and its mission is promoting efficient, safe, and decarbonized research facilities. I2SL offers in-person conferences, webinars, and a variety of resources and technical networks to educate lab professionals on sustainable topics.

I2SL reserves the right to change member benefits at any time, but will notify members in advance.

For more than a decade, I2SL has supported information sharing and education opportunities among the various stakeholders interested in improving efficiency and reducing the environmental impact of labs.

I2SL looks to its members to develop resources, including building performance benchmarks, professional training, and best practices guides—all of which help guide the lab community toward creating more sustainable facilities. Become an I2SL member and join the front lines of these initiatives and take advantage of all that an I2SL membership has to offer.

Member Responsibilities

- Pay annual membership dues set by I2SL.
- Accurately represent I2SL by following the organization's branding and marketing guidance.
- Actively contribute to and promote the I2SL Annual Conference, working groups, chapters, webinars, and Labs2Zero efforts.
